Part 3 Tables – Allocation of Local Choice Functions and Non-Executive Functions

Notes:-

The Local Government Act 2000 makes a distinction between executive functions and non-executive functions.

"Executive Functions" are the responsibility of the Leader or (where the Leader decides to delegate them) full Cabinet, Cabinet Committees, individual members of Cabinet, Joint Committees, Area Forums and Delegated Officers. If such decisions are not in accordance with the budget and policy framework, the decisions must be referred to City Council. That is the only situation when the City Council can make executive decisions.

"Non-Executive Functions" are the responsibility of City Council, or if City Council decides to delegate them, Council Committees, Joint Committees and Area Committees. They can also be delegated to Council Sub-Committees and Delegated Officers.

There are some non-executive functions that can only be the responsibility of City Council. They cannot be delegated to another body. These are identified in Article 4.

By virtue of section 9D of the 2000 Act, every function is an executive function unless a statute says differently or the function is identified in regulations made by the Secretary of State.

Local Choice Functions - Some functions are "local choice functions". That means that the City Council can decide whether the function is executive or non-executive.

Table 3.1 identifies these local choice functions and designates them as executive, non-executive or both.

In the case of non-executive functions, it identifies whether they are full Council functions or delegates them to Council Committees, and without prejudice to other provisions of this Constitution, identifies the most appropriate Delegated Officer.

Non-Executive Functions - Table 3.2 identifies the non-executive functions, whether they are full Council functions or delegated to Council Committees, and without prejudice to other provisions of this Constitution, identifies the most appropriate Delegated Officer.
